Antarctic Seals

Research Methods and Techniques

Edited by R. M. LAWS

Foreword by DONALD B. SINIFF

The Antarctic is the world's most important habitat for seals, currently supporting more seals than all other parts of the world combined. As various national Antarctic programmes were established to study these animals, the need to standardize techniques became apparent. Antarctic Seals arising from work by the Scientific Committee on Antarctic Research, gives a detailed account of well-trying and agreed methodologies, techniques and rationale for the collection and initial analysis of data on the biology and population ecology of Antarctic seals. This volume will help facilitate comparisons between different regions of Antarctica, and will also provide a guide for those studying seals in other parts of the world and those carrying out research on other large mammal species.

BELHAVEN/SPRI POLAR RESEARCH SERIES

Published by Belhaven Press in association with the Scott Polar Research Institute

Satellite remote sensing of polar regions

Robert A. Massom

This volume describes the capture, processing, and use of images taken from satellites of the polar regions and their applications to the study of ice and snow, and of high-latitude meteorological, biological, and oceanic variables. It also provides a reference manual for all satellites from 1960. 288 pages, illustrated, hardback. ISBN 1-85293-179-5. £39.50

Arctic homeland: kinship, community and development in Northwest Greenland

Mark Nuttall

The Inuit of Greenland are a traditional people whose way of life and culture are under threat both from external pressures of 'development' and internal challenges to social cohesion. This study, based on extensive field research, examines the anthropology of the Inuit, the nature of their culture, their relationships with their meagre resource base, and their responses to change. A rich and vivid portrait of a little-known people. 196 pages, illustrated, hardback. ISBN 1-85293-225-2. £39.50.

The myth of the explorer: the press, sensationalism, and geographical discovery

Beau Riffenburgh

Concentrating on the 'Golden Age' of exploration between 1855 and 1910, this book examines how the Anglo-American press created the popular cult of the explorer, and how the insatiable appetite for adventure led to sometimes shabby actions as well as genuine bravery and scientific research. Based on extensive original research, the book reassesses many (not only polar) explorers' reputations and makes intriguing links between popular culture, the growth of science, imperialism, and the role of the press. 226 pages, illustrated, hardback. ISBN 1-85293-260-0. £39.50.

Arctic Medical Research

Official journal published by the Nordic Council for Arctic Medical Research and the International Union for Circumpolar Health.

Editors: Hans K. Åkerblom, Helsinki and Juhani Leppäluoto, Oulu

Arctic Medical Research publishes scientific articles containing information on human health and disease in the polar and related areas. Original research reports, review articles and reports of clinical observations are considered for publication. Special issues and supplements containing extended abstracts of meetings and conferences, monographs or extensive papers can also be published.

Arctic Medical Research publishes articles on subjects including:

- cold adaptation • cold physiology • clinical medicine • epidemiology • family health • accidents and their prevention • health effects of environmental pollution • public health • biology • psychology • medical history

INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF REMOTE SENSING

Edited by:
A P Cracknell
Department of Applied
Physics and Electronic & Manufacturing
Engineering, University of Dundee, Dundee
DD1 4HN, UK

This journal is concerned with the science and technology of remote sensing and the applications of remotely sensed data in all major disciplines. Principal topics are: data collection, analysis, interpretation and display; surveying from space, air and water platforms; sensors; image processing; use of remotely sensed data; economic surveys and cost benefit analyses. The journal contains primary papers on basic science, techniques and applications, plus a technical news and information section and a section of Remote Sensing Letters containing material which merits fast publication.

The IJRS is an Official Journal of the Remote Sensing Society.

Readership

Scientists, engineers and managers interested in geophysical parameters, mapping, environmental monitoring, natural renewable and non-renewable resources and pollution.
