The British Institute of Archaeology at Ankara was founded in 1948 and exists to undertake, promote and encourage British research into archaeology and related subjects in Turkey and surrounding regions such as the Black Sea littoral.

A small staff at the Institute's premises in Ankara, headed by Dr Hugh Elton as Director, conduct their own research, assist scholars and maintain the Library and the research collections. The premises in Ankara are a centre for research and house a library of approximately 42,000 volumes. The research collections of archaeobotanical, epigraphic and pottery material, together with a laboratory and computer services, are available free of charge to members of the Institute. The Institute is able to offer to members, for a reasonable charge, the use of accommodation, surveying and photographic equipment, and vehicles.

Seventeen excavations and surveys, as well as museum-based research and publication projects, are currently sponsored by the Institute. Excavations presently supported include those at the Neolithic site of Çatalhöyük directed by Ian Hodder of the University of Cambridge, at the Byzantine city of Amorium directed by Chris Lightfoot of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York and at Pichvnari in the Republic of Georgia directed by Michael Vickers of the Ashmolean Museum and Amiran Kakhidze of Batumi Archaeological Museum. Surveys range from the multi-period Konya Plain Survey directed by Douglas Baird of the University of Liverpool, to the investigation of the Iron Age city of Kerkenes Dağ by Geoff Summers of the Middle East Technical University, to the study of the Byzantine Anastasian Wall and associated features conducted by Jim Crow of the University of Newcastle upon Tyne.

Subscription to the Institute costs £30 per annum (£15 for students and those who are unwaged). Members are entitled to copies of the Institute's journal, Anatolian Studies, and of its annual publication on current research, Anatolian Archaeology, a discount on other Institute publications, notification of conferences and lectures, and access to the library, accommodation and other facilities in Ankara.
