AFRICA – THE NEXT THIRTY YEARS Edited by Ali Mazrui & Hasu Patel

Leading scholars of African affairs examine race relations, ideology, literature, violence and political community. They further project demographic trends; planning for resources; prospects for communications, science and technology; and economic integration and development. Finally, they assess how these projections are likely to influence the continent for the rest of the 20th century. "The balanced approach taken in these essays offers the reader an authoritative concept of Africa's future as it looks at this point in time." Saturday Review

ZAMBIA: SECURITY AND CONFLICT Jan Pettman

This is a detailed study of domestic and foreign politics in an African state, looking in particular at the way in which the security of the state becomes identified with the survival of the government. The author examines in depth the conflicts and pressures which exist for many of the Third World countries as political leaders strive to achieve domestic stability and international security.

MALAWI Foreign policy and development Carolyn McMaster

Malawi occupies a key position between black and white-ruled Africa; this book examines the pressures on domestic and foreign policies which result from the country's underdevelopment and geo-political position. The author analyses the way in which decision-making is centred on the political leadership, in the context of South Africa's expanding sphere of influence and the growing activities of the liberation movements in the area.

This is an area of research which will become increasingly important in the next decade. "...new and crucial insights" Tribune
