

OTHER ACTIVITIES

An Institute of Public Administration is being established in Manila by the Institute of Public Administration of the University of Michigan, in cooperation with the University of the Philippines and the Mutual Security Agency. Under a contract between the two Universities, with MSA financing, the University of Michigan will provide the required professional staff and library facilities, and the University of the Philippines will provide physical facilities. The Institute is planned to combine in one center an educational program in public administration, a research and publication program, and a service and consulting program. The educational phase of the project is twofold, combining an academic program with both undergraduate and graduate curricula for students preparing for government service, and in-service training courses for governmental employees.

The period of the contract is two years. At the end of that time, the expectation is that the Institute in Manila can continue under Philippine auspices. Professor John W. Lederle, director of the University of Michigan Institute of Public Administration, is in Manila to direct the first year of operation under the contract. Other staff members already in Manila are Professor J. T. Salter, on leave from the University of Wisconsin, Dr. James E. Larson, formerly with the Bureau for Government Research at West Virginia University, and Theodore H. Drews, from the Michigan Institute of Public Administration. Additions to the staff of the Manila Institute will be made in the near future. Professor Ferrel Heady, assistant director of the Michigan Institute of Public Administration, is coordinator in Ann Arbor for the Philippine program.

The Ford Foundation recently made a grant to the American Committee for A United Europe to enable it to ask a group of scholars at Harvard University, connected with the Graduate School of Public Administration and the Law School, to undertake a comprehensive review of experience with federal government, especially as it has worked in Australia, Canada, Germany, Switzerland, and the United States. Such a review has been requested by the Commission d'Études pour une Constitution Européenne, established by the European Movement under the presidency of M. Paul Henri Spaak of Belgium, former president of the European Consultative Assembly at Strasbourg. The preparatory work of this Commission, composed of leading jurists from the six nations of the Coal and Steel Community Treaty, is closely tied in with the constitution for the European Community envisaged by the European Defense Community Treaty (Article 38), the drafting of which has recently been authorized by the Foreign Ministers of the six nations and will be in the hands of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Coal and Steel Community.

The Federalism Research Project at Harvard is under the joint direction of Professor Carl J. Friedrich and Professor Robert Bowie of the Harvard Law School. Others associated with it are Professors Freund, Sohn, and Sutherland of the Harvard Law School, Professors McCloskey and Brinser of the Graduate School of Public Administration, and Professor McWhinney of the Yale Law School and department of political science, as senior associates, as well as a group of younger men. While an important part of the work reached the preliminary draft stage by the end of September in order to be available for meetings at Strasbourg and Brussels, it is expected that the work of the Project will continue throughout the winter.

Gordon Gray, chairman of the Ford Foundation Board on Overseas Training and Research, announced on October 6 the list of winners of the Foreign Study and Research Fellowships awarded by the Board. The awards, aggregating $473,850, are for periods of from one to three years and will enable 83 young American scholars to initiate or continue studies on various problems concerning Asia and the Near and Middle East. Recipients, who were selected from more than 700 qualified applicants, range in age from 21 to 43, the great majority being between 26 and 32. Eighteen of the fellowships were awarded to political scientists. Other special fields of interest represented are: anthropology, 11; economics, 7; languages, 6; history, 13; Islamic studies, 3; geography, 4; literature, 3; sociology, 7; journalism, 6; law, 1; area studies, 4.

The purpose of this program, which was originally announced last March by the Ford Foundation, is to stimulate study of certain critical foreign areas and to help meet their urgent need for large numbers of men and women well qualified in business, education, government, agriculture, labor relations, and the professions. No decision has as yet been reached with respect to the possibility of continuing the program for a second year.

The Institut International de Droit Public, which was founded in 1927 and is connected with the Faculté de Droit at Paris, elected to membership Professors Thomas I. Cook, Carl J. Friedrich, Erich Hula, and Manley O. Hudson at its 1952 meeting, the first that has been held during the postwar period. This meeting was devoted to the problem: "Individual Liberties in International Society." Papers were delivered by Professor Georges Scelle of the Faculté de Droit and by Professor Boris Mirkine-Guetzévich, secretary general of the Institut, who teaches at the Faculté de Droit and is dean of the French University in New York.

National officers elected by Pi Sigma Alpha, honorary political science fraternity, at the biennial convention held in Buffalo are: Elwyn A. Mauck, Maryland State Fiscal Research Bureau, president; J. Eugene Harley, University of Southern California, vice-president; Joseph R. Starr, University of Maryland, secretary-treasurer. Newly elected members of the Council are: Mona Fletcher, Kent State University; Cullen B. Gosnell, Emory University; and Charles W. Shull, Wayne University.

The Citizenship Clearing House, with a grant from the Maurice and Laura Falk Foundation, sponsored a workshop at Colgate University, September 1-12, 1952, on the subject: "College Preparation for Politics." Instructors from twenty-one colleges in New York State participated in roundtable discussions, listened to lectures, and worked on the parts of their courses in political parties, American government, and social science relating to active citizen participation in political and party affairs. The staff of the workshop included: Paul S. Jacobsen, Colgate; James W. Miller, Michigan State; Rodney L. Mott, Colgate; Arthur Naftalin, Minnesota; Thomas H. Reed, Doris D. Reed, and E. E. Schattschneider, Wesleyan; and George H. Williams, New York University Law School. A number of Democratic and Republican political leaders and workers from New York State also participated in the discussions.

Public Administration Clearing House convened a Conference on Comparative Administration at Princeton, N. J., September 12-14, 1952, to canvass resources, human and documentary, for teaching and research to meet the increasing needs of Americans who must deal directly with administrators in other countries or with problems at home that require understanding of foreign administrative processes. Herbert Emmerich, director of PACH, presided. Among the political scientists participating were: Charles S. Ascher, Brooklyn College; Karl W. Deutsch, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; William Ebenstein, Princeton University; Rowland A. Egger, University of Virginia; Herman Finer, University of Chicago; Pendleton Herring, Social Science Research Council; Arthur N. Holcombe, Harvard University; Roy C. Macridis, Northwestern University; Roscoe C. Martin, Syracuse University; Arnold Miles, Bureau of the Budget; Dankwart Rustow, Princeton University; Wallace S. Sayre, City College of New York; Walter R. Sharp, Yale University; Rufus D. Smith, New York University; Harold Stein, Inter-University Case Program; H. Arthur Steiner, University of California (Los Angeles); Donald C. Stone, Mutual Security Agency.

Institutions participating in the Washington Semester plan of The American University during the fall semester of 1952-53 are: Beloit College, Birmingham Southern College, Bucknell University, Denison University, Dickinson College, Hamline University, Lindenwood College, Millsaps College, Transylvania College, and William Jewell College. William E. Briggs, assistant professor of political science and public administration, is academic director of the program.

A new combination program for graduate students in the field of public administration was launched at the State University of Iowa last September. The new arrangement combines a study program in public administration and political science, directed by the staff of the department of political science, with an in-service training program in public administration, under the supervision of the Institute of Public Affairs.

The in-serving training feature of the new program will include the placement of interns with various city, county, and state administrative units for portions of their training. Internship will be supplemented by research into problems of state, county, and municipal government. Studies of value to public officials will be published and distributed by the Institute of Public Affairs. Some of the internships will carry stipends and tuition scholarships on a merit basis.

The academic side of the new program in public administration brings together basic courses and advanced courses which have been presented for years in the department of political science and other liberal arts departments, and in the College of Commerce. The academic program for a graduate student in public administration may include, in addition to a concentration in political science, courses in the departments of geography, psychology, sociology, economics, accounting, general business, and labor and industrial management. Programs for graduate students will be flexible and will be adapted to individual needs.

The main purpose of the combination arrangement is the addition to a sound academic program of an opportunity for intimate, first-hand contact with the functions, problems, and activities of government offices and departments.

A study of the public administration aspects of the atomic energy program is being made at the Institute of Public Administration of the University of Michigan. The project is financed by a grant from the Michigan Memorial-Phoenix Project which was created to commemorate the war dead of the University of Michigan by study of the peacetime uses of atomic energy. Assistant Professor Morgan Thomas of the department of political science and Dr. Richard Tybout of the department of economics compose the faculty research staff. Associate Professor Ferrel Heady, assistant director of the Institute of Public Administration, is the project coordinator for the Institute.

At Princeton University, Professors George A. Graham and Marver H. Bernstein, assisted by Professors Donald H. Wallace and William M. Beaney, Jr., are completing a study of the postwar stock pile program as part of the current administrative history program of the national government, sponsored by the Bureau of the Budget. This study has been done under contract with the Bureau of the Budget, the National Security Resources Board, and the Office of Defense Mobilization, and was used as a training project during 1951-52 in the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs.

A Committee for Research in Social Sciences was recently established at Stanford University, under a $100,000 grant from the Ford Foundation. Professor Albert H. Bowker, head of the statistics department, is chairman of the Committee, and Professor Alfred de Grazia has been named executive officer. Two extensive projects have already been authorized. One is a study of political and economic problems arising from social changes; the second project involves population surveys of the San Francisco Bay Area.

Edward S. Corwin, McCormick Professor of Jurisprudence, Emeritus, Princeton University, served as editor in the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress from September, 1949, to January 2, 1952, directing a revision of The Constitution of the United States of America (Annotated). Professor Corwin also lectured in the department of law, New York University, February to April, 1952. He gave a course in the New School for Social Research during the spring term of 1952, and participated in the Conference of the Institute of Natural Law, University of Notre Dame, December 10-14, 1951. On April 10, 1952, Professor Corwin addressed a joint dinner meeting of the Philadelphia Men's Association of Phi Beta Kappa and the University Club of Philadelphia on the subject: "Our Expensible Constitution."

Carl J. Friedrich, professor of government at Harvard University, was given an LL.D. degree by Grinnell College on June 8, 1952; he also delivered the commencement address at that institution. Professor Friedrich was recently elected a permanent vice-president of the Académie Internationale de l'Histoire Constitutionnelle et de la Science Politique at Paris in place of Professor Joseph P. Chamberlain of Columbia University, deceased.

Meredith P. Gilpatrick, formerly of Ohio State University, was a Fulbright visiting lecturer in political science in Austria during 1951-52, serving for the first semester at the University of Innsbruck and at the University of Vienna during the second semester. In February and March, Professor Gilpatrick taught at the Salzburg Seminar in American Studies, and in late June attended the Internationales Treffen für Erwachsenenbildung held in Salzburg as one of the United States delegates.

Alfred J. Hotz, chairman of the department of political science of Western Reserve University, will give a special seminar on "NATO: New Concept in International Organization" at the January, 1953, session of the Salzburg Seminar in American Studies.

Joseph E. McLean, associate professor of politics at Princeton University, is handling the staff work for the Committee on Selection for the Rockefeller Public Service Award Program. Professor McLean has also been appointed a member of the New Jersey Law Enforcement Council by Governor Driscoll.

Norman D. Palmer, professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania, who is in India as a visiting Fulbright professor at the University of Delhi, addressed the Indian Council of World Affairs in New Delhi, August 22, 1952, on the subject: "United States Policy Toward China in the Postwar Period." Professor Palmer is assisting in the inauguration of a postgraduate program in political science at the University of Delhi, and is lecturing to the students who are enrolled in this program. He is also visiting other Indian universities for brief periods, for lectures and consultation.

John E. Stoner, associate professor of government at Indiana University, is engaged in a comparative study of highway administration, and during the summer conducted a pilot study of the highway administration in three adjoining counties in Indiana, Ohio, and Michigan. The project is sponsored by the Graduate School of Indiana University, The Joint Highway Research Project at Purdue University, and The Highway Research Board of the National Research Council.
