

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

ROBERTO P. KORZENIEWICZ is currently completing a book on the labor movement in Argentina between 1887 and 1946. Preliminary articles on this topic can be found in LARR, the Hispanic American Historical Review, and the Bulletin of Latin American Research. His other research interests include the role of labor in democratic transitions and patterns of development in semiperipheral nations.

LUIZ FERNANDO VALENTE, Assistant Professor of Portuguese and Brazilian Studies at Brown University, has published widely on Brazilian and comparative literature. He serves as Associate Editor of Brasil/Brazil: A Journal of Brazilian Literature and Consulting Editor on Latin American literature for The Explicator and is also a past president of the Northeastern Association of Brazilianists.

PETER SINGELMANN is Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Missouri–Kansas City. His previous publications have focused on peasant movements, social banditry, and Mexican cane growers as well as on issues of general social theory and the history of social thought. He is currently involved in a comparative historical study of industrialization, politics, and peasant movements in Mexico and Germany.

DILMUS D. JAMES is Professor of Economics at the University of Texas at El Paso. He specializes in the economic aspects of technological change in developing countries. Among other books, he coedited Progress toward Development in Latin America: From Prebisch to Technological Autonomy.

RICHARD J. SALVUCCI teaches at Trinity University. He is working on a study of trade, the balance of payments, and economic growth in nineteenth-century Mexico. A preliminary version of part of this project appeared in the Hispanic American Historical Review in November 1991.

WILLIAM T. VICKERS is Professor of Anthropology at Florida International University. He has conducted ethnological fieldwork in Ecuador, Peru, and Mexico, focusing primarily on the human ecology of native American communities and their land and civil rights. He wrote Los Sionas y Secoyas: su adaptación al ambiente amazónico, coauthored Useful Plants of the Siona and Secoya Indians of Eastern Ecuador, and coedited Adaptive Responses of Native Amazonians.

WENDY ASHMORE is Associate Professor of Anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania. Her research centers on architecture and settlement patterns of the ancient Maya and adjacent peoples of southern Mesoamerica, especially on social and symbolic dimensions of the pre-Hispanic built environment. She edited Lowland Maya Settlement Patterns and coedited with Richard R. Wilk Household and Community in the Mesoamerican Past. Her monograph on the Classic period settlement at Quiriguá, Guatemala, is currently in press.

VICKY UNRUH is Associate Professor of Spanish at the University of Kansas and Associate Editor of Latin American Theatre Review. She has published numerous articles on Latin American theatre and narrative and is currently completing a book on Latin American literary vanguard movements of the 1920s and early 1930s.

DAVID MURRAY is Professor of History at the University of Guelph. He published Odious Commerce: Britain, Spain, and the Abolition of the Slave Trade to Cuba (1980) and has written a number of articles on slavery, the slave trade, and Canadian–Latin American relations.

EDWARD DEW is Professor of Politics at Fairfield University in Fairfield, Connecticut. He is the author of Politics in the Altiplano and The Difficult Flowering of Surinam.

MERILEE S. GRINDLE, a political scientist at the Harvard Institute for International Development, teaches at the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard. She specializes in issues of policy-making and implementation in developing countries and has written, coauthored, and edited several books on agricultural and rural development policies. These include her Searching for Rural Development: Labor Migration and Employment in Mexico and two coauthored books, Public Choices and Policy Change and Seeking Solutions: Framework and Cases for Small Enterprise Development Programs.

LOIS STANFORD is Assistant Professor of Anthropology at New Mexico State University in Las Cruces. Her major research areas include peasant organizations and commercial agriculture in Mexico. She is currently studying the potential impact of the North American Free Trade Agreement on producers of export crops in Michoacán in a collaborative effort with the Mexican research institute Centro de Ecodesarrollo (CECODES).

HOBART A. SPALDING teaches Latin American and Caribbean history at Brooklyn College of CUNY. He has published widely on Latin American labor and working-class history and U.S.–Latin American labor relations. His latest work analyzes the social impact of neoliberal economics in the Southern Cone.

MICHAEL GOLD-BISS is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at St. Cloud State University. He has taught at the School of International Service and the School of Public Affairs of the American University in Washington, D.C., where he received his Ph.D. in 1992. His research focuses on the democratization of state and society and challenges to sovereignty and political legitimacy in the Americas. He and Richard L. Millett are coediting a book on the military in post-cold war Latin America.

ROBERT H. TRUDEAU is Chair of the Political Science Department and Director of the Latin American Studies Program at Providence College. He is currently chairing the LASA Task Force on Human Rights and Academic Freedom and is a member of the steering committee of the Guatemala Scholars Network. He has written many papers and articles on Guatemalan politics.

JOEL WOLFE is an assistant professor in the Department of History at Williams College. He is the author of Working Women, Working Men: São Paulo and the Rise of Brazil's Industrial Working Class, 1900–1955, forthcoming from Duke University Press.

IVAN JAKSIC is Associate Professor of History and Director of the Center for Latin America at the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee. He wrote Academic Rebels in Chile (1989) and coedited with Paul W. Drake The Struggle for Democracy in Chile, 1982–1990 (1991).