The Third International Conference for the INHH

'The Hospital: Form + Function'

19–21 June 2003

The International Network for the History of Hospitals will hold its first international conference in North America at McGill University in Montreal in June 2003. The conference seeks to examine the relationship between the form and function of health care institutions as it has developed over time, place, and institution from the medieval to the modern period in different local and national contexts. There will also be a forum to display and discuss posters detailing research projects.

Contributions are invited from scholars working in the widest possible range of disciplines, including historians of art, architecture, and medicine as well as from architects.
