ZEITGEIST IN BABEL The Postmodernist Controversy

Ingeborg Hoesterey (ed.)

The concept of 'postmodernism' is employed with increasing frequency in criticism relating to aesthetic mediums as well as in philosophical discourse. This volume examines the range of discourse-formations concerning postmodernism as they take their often dramatically different shapes across various disciplines. With contributions from Jacques Derrida and Umberto Eco, Zeitgeist in Babel can be read as a marker of the historical state of knowledge at the beginning of the 1990s.

THROWING LIKE A GIRL AND OTHER ESSAYS IN FEMINIST PHILOSOPHY AND SOCIAL THEORY

Her contributions to social theory raise critical questions about women and citizenship, the relations of capitalism and women's oppression, and the differences between a feminist theory that emphasizes women's difference and one that assumes a gender-neutral humanity.

TIME, NARRATIVE, AND HISTORY

David Carr

Narrative is a temporal structure inherent in our way of living and acting argues David Carr, challenging the preoccupation with forms of discourse which has characterized much recent philosophy. Drawing on the phenomenological analyses of temporality in the writings of Husserl and Heidegger, Carr explores the narrative forms embodied in the experience and action of the individual and then goes on to project this analysis on to the social plane by examining how communities constitute themselves by composing and re-composing their stories.

LANGUAGE AND "THE FEMININE" IN NIETZSCHE AND HEIDEGGER

Jean Graybeal

Nietzsche and Heidegger were both lovers of language. Jean Graybeal argues that their writing styles demonstrate a relationship with the feminine dimension of language. Using the theories of Julia Kristeva concerning the "symbolic" and "semiotic" dispositions of language, Graybeal reads Nietzsche and Heidegger as writers whose experimentation with language is directly relevant to their quests for nonmetaphysical ways of thinking and the feminist project of moving beyond male dominance.
