

Persistent Hæmorrhage.

COAGULOSE (P., D. & Co.), a sterile, soluble, anhydrous preparation of normal blood serum, containing the fibrin ferment necessary to produce coagulation of the blood, is of great service in all cases of hæmorrhage due to defective coagulation of the blood—e. g., epistaxis, pulmonary hæmorrhage, hæmorrhage during and after turbinectomy, tonsillotomy or other operation. Its administration is also indicated, prophylactically, prior to surgical or dental operations on hæmophilic subjects.

MODE OF USE.—Dissolve the Coagulose in sterile, distilled water, and inject hypodermically; for application to accessible bleeding surfaces the powder may be dusted on sterile gauze.
