Socialisme et sociologie

[Socialism and Sociology]

How can the return of reactionary forms of nationalism in Europe be thwarted? Their rise, unprecedented since the Second World War, has left liberal parties in a stupor. Meanwhile socialism, which until recently provided the basis for the progressive camp, is being shaken to its core like seldom before in its history. The three studies brought together in this book seek to reexamine the twin problems of nationalist hegemony and the crisis of socialism from their beginnings. This task entails redefining socialism in its irreducibility as regards other political doctrines and ideological currents, taking another look at the contribution of social sciences to politics, and envisaging the future of Europe through the prism of two major issues: education and ecology.

Le temps des sociétés

D'Émile Durkheim à Marc Bloch

[The Time of Societies: From Émile Durkheim to Marc Bloch]

Between the time measured by physics and the time of our inner consciousness (explored in literature and psychoanalysis), there exists a social time. This ensemble of collective representations informs our relationships with time, including angst about the future, the reawakening of memories, and the end of grand narratives. Two major dimensions of this time specific to societies must be taken into account: the questioning of progress as a way of organizing history and the explanation of individual action through social issues or mentalities. Drawing on about twenty archival collections, this work offers a fresh perspective on some of the major intellectual figures of the 20th century, such as Émile Durkheim, Marcel Mauss, Maurice Halbwachs, Lucien Lévy-Bruhl, Lucien Febvre and Marc Bloch.

Recommendations for authors

The Annales only accept original and previously unpublished work, which can be submitted in French or English as well as Italian, German, or Spanish. All manuscripts are assessed by the editorial board within six months of reception and are also sent to two external specialists for peer review. The board can decide to accept a manuscript as it stands or subject to revision. They may also ask for a more substantially modified version that will pass through the evaluation process a second time, or refuse the article directly.

Manuscripts should be sent to the address annaes@ehess.fr in a format such as Word or Open Office (and not as a PDF). They must be accompanied by a title and an abstract of around 1,500 characters in both French and English. Maps, graphs, or figures should be submitted as separate files, in high definition and a size suitable to the format of the journal (170 mm × 240 mm). They must be accompanied by titles, captions, and a note of their sources. Authors are asked to specify their institutional affiliation and their nationality.

The text must be double spaced and follow the recommendations set out on the site <http://annaes.ehess.fr/index.php?179>. It must not exceed 90,000 characters (including notes and spaces), and footnotes are limited to 100. Citations in foreign or ancient languages must be translated into either French or English, depending on the language of the article, with the original included in a footnote if necessary.

Please note that all accepted articles will be published in both French and English, in print and online. Authors will be put in contact with translators and are encouraged to work with our editors to establish high quality academic translations.

To this end, authors of accepted articles will be asked to furnish the original French or English citations from works first published in either language, or to provide references to canonical translations where they exist. They commit to providing a document indicating these alternative citations and references, as well as any necessary changes to proper nouns, etc., and their preferred translations of specific concepts or terminology used.
