

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

GAUVIN ALEXANDER BAILEY is professor and Bader Chair in Southern Baroque Art at Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. His publications include Baroque & Rococo (2012), The Andean Hybrid Baroque: Convergent Cultures in the Churches of Colonial Peru (2010), Between Renaissance and Baroque: Jesuit Art in Rome, 1565–1610 (2003), Art of Colonial Latin America (2005), and Art on the Jesuit Missions in Asia and Latin America, 1542–1773 (1999). He has also curated or acted as consultant on a number of exhibitions of Latin American, Asian, and European art in Europe, the United States, and Latin America.

LUISA BLANCO is an assistant professor of economics at Pepperdine University and an adjunct researcher at RAND's Center of Latin American Social Policy. Blanco's research focuses on issues related to economic development in Latin America, and her work has been published in academic journals such as World Development and Journal of Development Studies. She is currently working on a project funded by Centro Andino de Fomento to study the impact of judicial reform on crime and trust in institutions in Mexico.

JUAN CARLOS CASTILLO es doctor en sociología de la Universidad de Humboldt, Berlín, y actualmente se desempeña como profesor asistente de la Escuela de Psicología e investigador asociado del Centro de Medición MIDE UC de la Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile. Sus temas de investigación se relacionan con los determinantes de percepciones y creencias respecto de la desigualdad económica. Entre sus publicaciones más recientes se encuentran The Legitimacy of Economic Inequality: An Empirical Approach to the Case of Chile (2011), "Is Inequality Becoming Just? Changes in Public Opinion about Economic Distribution in Chile" (2012) y "Legitimacy of Inequality in a Highly Unequal Context: Evidence from the Chilean Case" (2011).

CARLOS DE LA TORRE is professor of sociology and director of international studies at the University of Kentucky, Lexington. His most recent books are Populist Seduction in Latin America (2nd ed., 2010); The Ecuador Reader: History, Culture, Politics, coedited with Steve Striffler (2008); and El retorno del pueblo: Populismo y nuevas democracias en América Latina, coedited with Enrique Peruzzotti (2008). He has been a fellow of the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation and of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

FLAVIA FIORUCCI es doctora en historia por la Universidad de Londres. Es investigadora del Consejo Nacional de Investigaciones Científicas y Técnicas (CONICET) e integra el Centro de Historia Intelectual de la Universidad Nacional de Quilmes. Ha publicado numerosos artículos sobre la temática de los intelectuales y la cultura en Argentina y América Latina. De reciente publicación es Intelectuales y Peronismo (2011). Actualmente trabaja en temas de historia de la educación y de la docencia.

ALISA GARNI earned her PhD in sociology at the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA) and is an assistant professor of sociology at Kansas State University. Her substantive interests include international development, migration, and social change. She has recently completed work examining why viajeras (women who work as international couriers) are significantly more active in some parts of El Salvador than others and what difference their industry makes to local communities. In other work, she examines the changing gender relations in postconflict, high-migration contexts, as well as the relationship among structural adjustment, mass migration, and alienation in postwar Central America.

FRANCISCO E. GONZÁLEZ is associate professor of Latin American studies at the Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) in Washington, DC. He is the author of the books Creative Destruction? Economic Crises and Democracy in Latin America (2012) and Dual Transitions from Authoritarian Rule: Institutionalized Regimes in Chile and Mexico, 1970–2000 (2008). González has won the “Excellence in Teaching Award” at SAIS twice, in 2006 and 2012. He holds master and doctoral degrees in politics from the University of Oxford.

ROBIN GRIER is professor of economics and international studies at the University of Oklahoma. Her research and teaching focus on the political economy of Latin America, economic development, and growth. She has published articles on these topics in journals such as the Journal of Law and Economics, Economic Development and Cultural Change, and the Journal of Development Economics. She is currently working on a book manuscript (coauthored with Jerry Hough) called “Building a State and a Market: The Spanish and English Legacy in the U.S. and Mexico.”

ALISHA C. HOLLAND is a doctoral candidate in the Government Department at Harvard University. Her research centers on the politics of law enforcement in Latin America and spans criminal, labor, and property law. Her current research examines how the nonenforcement of certain laws, or state forbearance, can be a political strategy to distribute resources to the poor.

IGNACIO MADERO CABIB es sociólogo e investigador asociado del Centro de Medición MIDE UC en la Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile. Próximamente iniciará sus estudios doctorales en la Universidad de Lausanne en Suiza, donde analizará cómo diversos factores de estratificación determinan el modo de inclusión a diferentes campos sociales.

ANTHONY P. MAINGOT is professor emeritus of sociology at Florida International University. Among his several publications are The United States and the Caribbean (1994), Small Country Development and International Labor Flows: Experiences in the Caribbean (1991), and the forthcoming Miami: The Grand and the Grandiose.

JOSÉ LUIS MARTÍNEZ CERECEDA es doctor en antropología social e histórica (por la École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales, Paris); Centro de Estudios Culturales Latinoamericanos, Universidad de Chile; y coordinador del programa de Doctorado en Estudios Latinoamericanos. Intereses de investigación: sociedades andinas prehispánicas y coloniales; sistemas de registro y comunicación andinos (sistemas visuales, orales y teatralidades). Sus últimas publicaciones son Gente de la tierra de guerra: Los lipes en la tradición inca y el imaginario colonial (2010); “¿Qué re-cordar? La construcción del tiempo y del acontecimiento en las memorias andinas coloniales (siglos XVI y XVII)“.

DANIEL MIRANDA es master en psicología de la Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile. Se desempeña como asistente de investigación en el Laboratorio de Psicología Social en la Escuela de Psicología de la misma universidad. Además, colabora en líneas de investigación relacionadas a la evolución de identidades, creencias y prácticas de tipo religioso, social y político en jóvenes universitarios; socialización política en el contexto escolar y participación política vinculada a la desigualdad y justicia social.

PHILLIP PENIX-TADSEN is assistant professor of Spanish and Latin American studies at the University of Delaware. He earned his PhD from Columbia University (2009). His research focuses on contemporary Latin American visual culture and the intersections of politics, economics, and media. He is currently working on a book project focusing on the simulation of Latin American culture in video games.

JOANNE RAPPAPORT teaches anthropology and Latin American cultural studies at Georgetown University. She is the author of Intercultural Utopias: Public Intellectuals, Cultural Experimentation, and Ethnic Pluralism in Colombia (2005), Cumbe Reborn: An Andean Ethnography of History (1994), The Politics of Memory: Native Historical Interpretation in the Colombian Andes (1990), and the coauthor, with Thomas Cummins, of Beyond the Lettered City: Indigenous Literacies in the Andes (2012).

AMY REYNOLDS (PhD, Princeton University) is an assistant professor of sociology at Wheaton College in Wheaton, Illinois. In 2010, she was a visiting fellow at the Kellogg Institute for International Studies at the University of Notre Dame. Her current work focuses on economic globalization and the influence of religion and culture within markets. She has conducted research throughout Canada, the United States, and Central America (Nicaragua, El Salvador, and Costa Rica).

JUAN GUILLERMO SÁNCHEZ M. is currently a PhD student in Hispanic studies at University of Western Ontario. He holds BA and MA degrees in literature from the Universidad Javeriana (Bogotá, Colombia). His recent books are Memoria e invención en la poesía de Humberto Ak'abal (2012), Diarios de Nada (2011), Río (2010), Letras del Sur (2009), and Sueños e historias de los jóvenes wayuu en Bogotá (2007). His articles are available online at <http://juanlunes.blogspot.com>.