PEOPLE IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

Activities

Craig Calhoun, professor of sociology and history, department of sociology, New York University, has been named president of the Social Science Research Council.

Donald Green, professor of political science, Yale University, invented a game called OCTI, which was named "Best Abstract Strategy Game of the Year" by the editors of Games (December 1999). OCTI (www.octi.net) simulates the ways democratic nations mobilize resources in times of war.

Chun-tu Hsueh, Huang Hsing Foundation (USA), received an honorary degree from IFES of the Russian Academy of Sciences. He was also elected a foreign member of the Russian Academy of Natural Sciences.

William F.S. Miles, professor of political science and Stotsky Professor of Jewish Historical and Cultural Studies, Northeastern University, has been chosen to participate in the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum's Center for Advanced Holocaust Studies summer 2000 seminar for faculty.

Robert D. Reischauer, senior fellow, The Brookings Institution, has been appointed president of the Urban Institute.

Administrative Appointments

James E. Davis, executive director, Social Science Education Consortium.

Edward S. Malecki Jr., acting associate dean, School of Natural and Social Sciences, California State University, Los Angeles. During 1998–99 Malecki served as director of curriculum and instruction for the School of Natural and Social Sciences at CSULA. Michael Munger, chair, department of political science, Duke University.

William D. Pederson, chair, American studies, Louisiana State University, Shreveport. Pederson also directs the university's Washington semester program and coordinates the department's annual Abraham Lincoln Lecture, Cross-Currents lecture series, and triennial presidential conference series.

Monty Van Wart, director, Center for Public Service, Texas Tech University, effective fall 2000.

New Appointments

Hugh Bartling, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Central Florida.

Regina P. Branton, assistant professor, department of political science, Rice University.

Glen Biglaiser, assistant professor, department of political science, Bowling Green State University.

Caroline C. Beer, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Vermont.

Frederick J. Boehmke, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Iowa.

Jo-Marie Burt, assistant professor of government and politics, department of public and international affairs, George Mason University; formerly, North American Congress on Latin America.

Gretchen G. Casper, associate professor of political science, Pennsylvania State University, University Park.

Melissa M. Deckman, assistant professor of political science, Washington College (MD).

FOR THE RECORD

Scharpf Awarded Johan Skytte Prize

Fritz W. Scharpf, director of the Max Planck Institute for the Study of Societies in Cologne, Germany, has been selected as the 2000 recipient of the Johan Skytte Prize, which is presented annually by the Johan Skytte Foundation at Uppsala University. Scharpf was recognized "for having analyzed key concepts of political science with theoretical clarity and empirical thoroughness during an era of transnational change." He is the first European scholar to win the prize.

Scharpf has focused on the problems of multilevel governance in the German federation and, more recently, similar problems within the European Union. In 1999 he published his findings in Governing in Europe: Effective and Democratic? (Oxford University Press). His other works in English include Governance in the European Union (Sage, 1996), which he coauthored with Gary Marks, Philippe C. Schmitter, and Wolfgang Streeck, and Policy-Making in the German Federal Bureaucracy (Elsevier, 1975), coauthored with Renate Mayntz.

A former fellow at the International Institute of Management at Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin and the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford University, Scharpf is currently secretary of APSA.

Fritz W. Scharpf

Michele DeMary, assistant professor, department of political science, Susquehanna University; formerly, Clark University.

Lisa Dicke, assistant professor, department of political science, Texas Tech University.

Carolyn L. Funk, associate professor, Center for Public Policy and department of political science and public administration, Virginia Commonwealth University.

Erik Gartzke, assistant professor, department of political science, Columbia University.

Brian Gerber, assistant professor, department of political science, Texas Tech University.

Jeff Gill, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Florida.

Lucy Goodhart, assistant professor, department of political science, Columbia University.

Steven Greene, assistant professor, department of political science, Texas Tech University.

Peggy Kohn, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Florida.

David Jackson, assistant professor, department of political science, Bowling Green State University.

Debra Javeline, assistant professor, department of political science, Rice University.

Andrea M. Lopez, assistant professor, department of political science, Susquehanna University; formerly, Hamilton College.

Cecelia Lynch, assistant professor, department of political science, University of California, Irvine; formerly, Northwestern University.

Paul S. Martin, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma. Allen S. Whiting, Regents Professor in the department of political science at the University of Arizona, delivered the sixth annual Huang Hsing Foundation Hsueh Chun-gu Distinguished Lecture in Asian Studies at St. Antony's College, Oxford University. His address was titled "Reflections on the Chinese Use of Force in Foreign Policy."

Robert L. Gallucci, dean, Edmund A. Walsh School of Foreign Service, Georgetown University, was honored by the National Capital Area Political Science Association with its 2000 Pi Sigma Alpha Award. Presented at the spring NCAPSA conference, the award is given to a political scientist who has made a significant contribution to public service.

Dianne Pinderhughes, director and professor, Afro-American Studies, University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, accepted an appointment as an associate in the Center for Advanced Study at Illinois. She also received an Individual Project Fellowship for 2000–01 from the Open Society Institute. She will use her position and funding to study "The Evolution of Civil Rights Organizations in the Twentieth Century: The Case of African American Politics."

Harold K. Jacobson, Jesse Siddal Reeves Professor of Political Science, senior research scientist, and visiting professor of law, Center for Political Studies, University of Michigan, has been named a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Lina Newton, doctoral candidate, department of political science, University of California, Irvine, won the 2000 Ted Robinson Memorial Award from the Southwestern Political Science Association. The Robinson Award is given annually to a graduate student engaged in the study of minority politics.

Kanchan Chandra will join the department of political science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as an assistant professor in July 2000. She works in comparative politics with a focus on ethnic politics, political parties and electoral systems, democracy and democratization, and South Asian politics.

Terry Clark, associate professor of political science, Creighton University, is currently serving as a visiting professor at the Institute of Political Studies at the University of Vilnius in Lithuania. He is there under a Fulbright fellowship for the 1999–2000 academic year. Clark also serves as faculty leader for Creighton's Summer Study Abroad in Lithuania.

Ramon Vela will join the faculty in the department of political science at the University of Central Florida teaching courses in political philosophy. He recently completed his doctoral work at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. His dissertation was titled "A Theory of Economic Democracy."

Frank R. Baumgartner, professor of political science at Pennsylvania State University, University Park, has been appointed head of the department of political science. A specialist in interest groups, agenda setting, and legislative politics in the United States and France, he joined the PSU faculty in 1998 after teaching at Cal Tech and Texas A&M.

Sharyn O'Halloran, has been promoted to the rank of associate professor with tenure in the department of political science at Columbia University. A scholar of American politics, she has been on faculty at Columbia since 1993. During the 1999–00 academic year she is on leave at Stanford University's School of Business. Her latest book, Elections as Instruments of Democracy: Majoritarian and Proportional Visions, will be published this spring.

William McLean, department of political science, University of Northern Iowa.

Franklyn C. Niles, assistant professor, department of political science, John Brown University.

John W. Patty, assistant professor of political science, Carnegie Mellon University.

Steven D. Roper, assistant professor, department of political science, Eastern Illinois University; formerly, Pace University.

Beth Rosenson, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Florida.

Deborah Schildkraut, assistant professor, department of politics, Oberlin College.

Jillian M. Schwedler, assistant professor, department of government and politics, University of Maryland, College Park.

Elora Shehabuddin, assistant professor, department of political science, University of California, Irvine; formerly, Princeton University.

R. Claire Snyder, assistant professor of government and politics, department of public and international affairs, George Mason University; formerly, Illinois State University.

Holloway Sparks, assistant professor of political science, Pennsylvania State University, University Park.

Valerie Sperling, assistant professor, department of government and international relations, Clark University.

Rorie Spill, department of political science, University of Northern Iowa.

Alvin Tillery Jr., instructor, department of government and international relations, University of Notre Dame; formerly, Harvard University.

Dana R. Villa, assistant professor, department of political science, University of California, Santa Barbara.

Promotions

Kathleen Bruhn, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, University of California, Santa Barbara.

David Epstein, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Columbia University.

Robert Erikson, professor, department of political science, Columbia University.

Michael H. Fleet, professor, department of political science, Marquette University.

Roger S. Karapin, associate professor of political science, Hunter College, CUNY.

Lawrence J. LeBlanc, professor, department of political science, Marquette University.

Aie-Rie Lee, professor, department of political science, Texas Tech University.

Robert Lieberman, associate professor, department of political science, Columbia University.

Sheryl Lutjens, professor, department of political science, Northern Arizona University.

Michael Munger, professor, department of political science, Duke University.

Steven Solnick, associate professor, department of political science, Columbia University.

Jacqueline Vaughn Switzer, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Northern Arizona University.

Retirements

Earl Huff, professor of political science, California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo.

David R. Morgan, professor of political science and Henry BellmonChair of Public Service, University of Oklahoma.

Joe Weatherby, professor of political science, California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo, is currently participating in the Faculty Early Retirement Program. Program participants teach one quarter per year.

Edward M. Wheat, professor of political science, University of Southern Mississippi. Wheat also served as director of USM's American studies program.

Visiting and Temporary

Matthew Streb, visiting assistant professor, department of political science, Loyola Marymount University.

Awards

James W. Button, professor, department of political science, University of Florida, received the UF President's Humanitarian Award and a College of Liberal Arts and Science Research Award.

Michele P. Claibourn has received a postdoctoral teaching fellowship in the department of political science at the University of Oklahoma.

William Merrill Downer, professor and chair, department of political science, Thiel College, received the President's Award for Excellence in Teaching in March 1999. The award is granted to one college faculty member annually.

Terri Fine, associate professor, department of political science, University of Central Florida, received the university's Excellence in Professional Service Award and LEAD Scholars Professional Leadership Award.

Dennis Galvan, professor, department of political science, University of Florida, won a College of Liberal Arts and Science Teaching Award. Paul Hagner, chair, department of political science, University of Memphis, has been named as one of the first two National Learning Infrastructure Initiatives Fellows. The NLII is a section of EDUCAUSE. Hagner will be traveling extensively during the year doing research on faculty engagement with new teaching technologies.

Beverly G. Hawk, assistant professor of government, University of Alabama, Birmingham, received the U.S. Department of State's Millennium International Volunteer Award in March in recognition of her work as director of the Alabama chapter of the Fulbright Association. The award goes to individuals who have made significant contributions to international education and exchange efforts.

David Hedge, professor, department of political science, University of Florida, received a College of Liberal Arts and Science Research Award.

Martin Johnson, doctoral candidate, department of political science, Rice University, was recently awarded First Prize (Graduate Division) in the 2000 General Social Survey Student Paper Competition. He received the award for "The Implications of Social Diversity: The Influence of Context, Attitudes and Behavior on State Public Policy."

Renee Johnson, professor, department of political science, University of Florida, received a College of Liberal Arts and Science Research Award.

Anthony Lang, assistant professor, department of political science, American University in Cairo, was named 1999 Teacher of the Year at AUC.

Mary Keys, department of government and international studies, University of Notre Dame, has won both a National Association of Scholars John M. Olin Faculty Fellowship and an Erasmus Institute Fellowship for the 2000-01 academic year.

Christopher Malone, doctoral candidate, Hunter College-CUNY, won the Hunter College President's Award for Excellence in Teaching.

Ido Oren, professor, department of political science, University of Florida, received a College of Liberal Arts and Science Humanities Research Award.

Houman Sadri, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Central Florida, received his college's Excellence in Undergraduate Teaching Award.

Jennifer Segal, University of Kentucky, received a Federal Judicial Fellowship for 2000-01. She will spend the year at the U.S. Sentencing Commission.

Bruce Wilson, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Central Florida, received the SECOLAS Sturgis Leavitt Prize for the best journal article on Latin America/Iberia.

Rick Wilson, professor of political science, Rice University, was presented Creighton University's 2000 Graduate School Alumni Merit Award. The award is given to an alumnus who has excelled both in his or her respective field and in the community.

James Wunsch, professor and chair, department of political science, Creighton University, won the Dean's Award for Excellence in Research and Scholarship in the College of Arts and Sciences. He was also awarded a sabbatical grant from the American Philosophical Society for his project, "Reforming the African State: Linking Africa's Peoples to their Governance."

KUDOS

Susan E. Clarke, professor of political science, University of Colorado, Boulder, has been named a Carnegie Scholar for 2000–01. She will be a member of the third class of scholars sponsored by the Carnegie Academy for the Scholarship of Teaching and Learning to conduct a yearlong investigation of issues related to instruction within their respective disciplines. Scholars conduct their research at their home institutions, but do meet in Menlo Park, California, for two 10-day orientation, training, and planning sessions. The scholars are also given other opportunities to meet with former scholars and members of their own class throughout the year to discuss their methods and findings.

Clarke received her Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. Before joining the faculty at Colorado in 1984, she taught at Northwestern University and also served as a visiting scholar with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. As a Fulbright scholar, she held the Thomas Jefferson Chair at the University of Amsterdam during the spring semester of 1999. She has been recognized by the Women's Caucus for Political Science as a Mentor of Distinction for her work with women graduate students and was recently presented the Elizabeth Gee Award by the University of Colorado for excellence in research, teaching, and mentoring by a female faculty member in the four-campus system.

Clarke's research and teaching interests include public policy and urban political economy, and she is particularly concerned with issues of globalization and local democracy. Her recent books include The New Localism (coedited with Edward Goetz) and The Work of Cities (coauthored with Gary L. Gaile).

HERE'S THE NEXT STEP FOR YOUR MOST POLITICALLY MOTIVATED STUDENTS.

We offer something unusual: a graduate program for students who love politics. Politics is not popular these days. It certainly needs reform. But a career in politics will let your students spend their working hours (sometimes long hours!) trying to bring their beliefs and principles to fruition.

If you have students who are activists, who volunteer for campaigns or causes, we can help them turn activism into their life's work. Our alumni are working today as campaign managers, fundraisers, issue advocates, legislative assistants, and lobbyists.

We combine rigorous academics with a creative hands-on approach, including a graduate internship program that lets students test their skills in the real world.

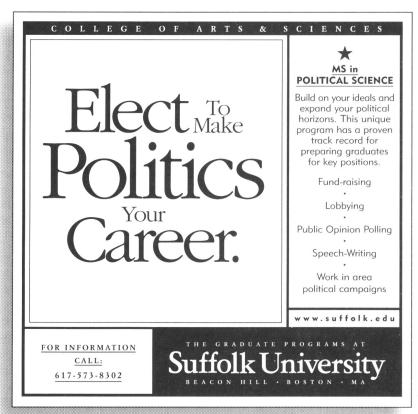

Our 34-credit MS takes one calendar year. Students can choose either of two tracks:

Professional Politics

The professionalization of politics is here to stay.

At the end of the 1990s there are from 5,000 to 10,000 professional political consultants, more than 20,000 full-time legislative staff, and close to 100,000 policy advocates and lobbyists in the USA. Aspiring professionals from around the world are coming here to study American political methods.

The keys to success in politics are ability and ethics. We teach both. Our program combines practical courses like fundraising and survey research with a deep grounding in political science. Students acquire practical skills, but also learn the principles of political life to help them quickly analyze and react to unprecedented situations.

NEW! International Relations

In September 2000 we will expand our former North American Politics track into a broadened International Relations program. The option to focus on North American Politics will be retained, but students can also choose European Politics, Politics of the Americas, International Organizations, or International Political Economy. By spending one extra semester, students can combine the MS in International Relations with a Diploma in Caribbean Studies from the University of the West Indies-St. Augustine.

This new track will follow our proven philosophy of combining academic rigor with hands-on experience and ethical integrity.

Would your students be interested? Please show them this ad!

John C. Berg, Professor and Director of Graduate Studies, Government Department, Suffolk University