
About the Authors

Nathan J. Brown is Associate Professor of Political Science and International Affairs at the George Washington University. He is currently completing a book on the rule of law in the Arab world.

Yves Dezalay is Chargé de recherche de première classe of the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, with specific connection to the Centre de Sociologie de l'Éducation et de la Culture of Paris. His recent works on the internationalization of law and legal practice include Merchants de droit (Paris: Fayard, 1992; forthcoming English translation, Northwestern University Press); Professional Competition and the Social Construction of Markets (co-edited with David Sugarman) (Routledge, forthcoming); and Dealing with Virtue: International Commercial Arbitration and the Construction of International Private Justice (with Bryant Garth).

Edward Donnerstein is Professor and past Chair of the Department of Communication at the University of California, Santa Barbara. A social psychologist, he is a member of the American Psychological Association Commission on Youth and Violence. His major research interest is in mass media violence, and he has published widely in this area. His most recent books include The Question of Pornography: Research Findings and Policy Implications (with Daniel Linz and Steven Penrod) and Big World, Small Screen: The Role of Television in American Society (with Aletha Huston et al.).

Lawrence Douglas is Assistant Professor in the Department of Law, Jurisprudence & Social Thought, Amherst College. His recent and forthcoming work includes essays in Law and Social Inquiry, Mosaic, the Massachusetts Review, Yale Journal of Law & the Humanities, and The Rhetoric of Law (volume edited by Austin Sarat and Thomas Kearns). He is currently at work on a project on legal representations of the Holocaust.

Bryant Garth is Director of the American Bar Foundation. Prior to joining the ABF in 1990, he was Dean of the Indiana University School of Law–Bloomington. His current research interests include the internationalization of legal practice, concentrating on trade and human rights, and the role of legal education in the United States. He and Yves Dezalay are completing Dealing with Virtue: International Commercial Arbitration and the Construction of International Private Justice.

Arthur C. Graesser is a Professor in the Departments of Psychology and Mathematical Sciences at the University of Memphis and is Director of the Institute for Intelligent Systems. His primary research interests are in cognitive science and discourse processing. More specific interests include knowledge representation, question asking and answering, tutoring, text comprehension, inference generation, conversation, reading, memory, expert systems, and human-computer interaction. He has published numerous articles and written or edited six books.

Kenneth C. Land is John Franklin Crowell Professor of Sociology and department chair at Duke University. His research interests include demographic and social statistical models and methods, aging and active life expectancy, micro models of criminal careers, multilevel models of criminal victimization, and the organizational evolution of cultural institutions.

Daniel Linz is Professor of Communication and Director of the Law and Society Program at the University of California, Santa Barbara. A social psychologist, he received his Ph.D. in 1985. His major research interests are in the area of mass media effects. His most recent books include The Question of Pornography: Research Findings and Policy Implications (with Edward Donnerstein and Steven Penrod) and Pornography (with Neil Malamuth). His current research involves a longitudinal study of television violence sponsored by the National Cable Association and numerous studies of the impact of the mass media on lay and professional legal decisionmaking. He has testified on sex, violence, and the law at numerous governmental hearings both in the United States and abroad.

Patricia L. McCall is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the North Carolina State University. Her research examines homicide and suicide rates across time and across geographic locations. Recent research also explores alternative statistical models of criminal careers.

Sally Engle Merry, President of the Law and Society Association 1993–95, is Class of '49 Professor in Ethics and Professor of Anthropology at Wellesley College. She is the author of Urban Danger: Life in a Neighborhood of Strangers (Temple University Press, 1981), Getting Justice and Getting Even: Legal Consciousness among Working-Class Americans (University of Chicago Press, 1990), and co-editor of The Possibility of Popular Justice: A Case Study of American Community Justice (University of Michigan Press, 1993) with Neal Milner. She has published numerous articles on legal ideology, mediation, urban ethnic relations, legal pluralism, and law and colonialism. She is a Fellow of the Bunting Institute at Radcliffe College in 1994–95 and is writing a book on the cultural transformation of family, sexuality, work, and violence against women during the American colonization of Hawai'i.

Raymond J. Michalowski is currently Professor and Chair of Criminal Justice and Adjunct Professor of Sociology at Northern Arizona University. His published works include Order, Law and Crime, Radikale Kriminologie, and articles on human rights, postmodernism and social analysis, criminological theory, corporate crime, and the political economy of crime and punishment.

Bradley J. Shafer is an attorney in private practice with the firm of Shafer & Maier, P.C., in Okemos, Michigan. He is a member of the State Bars of Michigan and Arizona and has a practice that concentrates in constitutional law, in particular First Amendment law. He has practiced in numerous court throughout the United States and has handled matters in the U.S. Supreme Court.