President Nyerere

of Tanzania writes on poverty and the need for the Church to take up a revolutionary stance. The Church should accept that the development of peoples means rebellion. At a given and decisive point in history men decide to act against those conditions which restrict their freedom as men . . . unless we participate actively in the rebellion against those social structures and economic organizations which condemn men to poverty, humiliation and degradation, then the Church will become irrelevant to man and the Christian religion will degenerate into a set of superstitions accepted by the fearful.

Geoffrey Preston, O.P.

of the Oxford community in the first of a number of articles on the theology of the sacraments discusses the principle of sacramentality itself—what he calls the 'focusing of God'.

Thomas A. Markus

Professor of Building Science in the University of Strathclyde, discusses the City as expression of the humanum. He asks 'to what extent cities have always been a deliberate statement about man's relationship to the world of nature?' He 'tries to show the direction in which cities are developing and how these developments may be said to enhance and enrich experience or to impoverish and destroy it'. This paper and the one that follows were read at the 'Man and Nature' conference at Spode House earlier this year.

Adrian Edwards, C.S.Sp.

replying to Professor Markus speaks of the City as expressed in the agora—as the juridical and political unit, and in the underground—the romanticism of the city. He also introduces what promises to be this season's in-word: Feng-shui.

Brian Byron

who lectures in Moral Theology at the Pius XII Seminary in Brisbane, looks once again at the question of the indissolubility of marriage. Is desertion a different matter from divorce? And does the 'Pauline privilege' really refer to the unbeliever or just to the unbaptized?

Five for Sorrow Ten for Joy

J Neville Ward

In this new book the author applies the understanding of prayer which he discussed in his book The Use of Praying to the method of prayer associated with The Rosary. In a brief description of the traditional use of The Rosary in western spirituality, Mr Ward shows how, as a Methodist, he has found it essential to this method that there should be continuing reflection on the mysteries of The Rosary outside its actual use. The book describes a Methodist's personal adventure in prayer with a help characteristic of the Roman Catholic Church

ANGLICAN VISION

Emmanuel Amand de Mendieta — £2.25

De Mendieta writes from an unusual breadth of experience: he is a Belgian by birth, and was for many years a Benedictine monk before joining the Church of England. In this work he expounds his hope for the great ecumenical Catholic Church of the future and the contribution that the Anglicans might make.

FULL FACE TO GOD

Hélène Dicken — 95p

The current interest in mystical experience is one manifestation of the search for enlarged awareness which Hélène Dicken feels can be met by a return to the traditional practice of spirituality. This is a book about mysticism with its feet firmly on the ground.

The Absolute and the Atonement DOM ILLTYD TRETHOWAN

'The awareness of God is the basis of all philosophy worthy of the name. The awareness of God in Christ is the heart of true religion.' With these words Dom Illtyd Trethowan defines the essence of his thinking in The Absolute and the Atonement. In his earlier work, Absolute Value, he examined man's knowledge and awareness of God. In this promised sequel he proceeds from there to investigate the central problems of Christian faith, presenting his arguments in a clear and readable way which cannot fail to be of interest to anyone at all concerned about the subject.
