- The "pearl of Africa" has been transformed into a chamber of horrors. This is the charge that Thomas Melady, former U.S. Ambassador to Uganda, lodges against Amin, the man who rules over that country. And why, he asks, is the U.N. silent on Amin's assault on Jews? In a separate article F. K. Sempang writes not only of the missionary enterprise in Africa, but of his own experience with the church in Uganda, his attempted assassination, and last-minute escape from the country.
- How do you see the CIA? And how does it see you? Harry Howe Ransom, long recognized as an authority on intelligence and surveillance practices, puts the present furor over the CIA in historical perspective and then asks some of the hard questions. But he doesn't stop there. He also provides some hard answers.
- He was named Shantidas ("Servant of Peace") by Gandhi. And when Lanza del Vasto, as he is otherwise known, showed up in the offices of WORLDVIEW recently, he told us why. Quite unexpectedly we then received an article by Marjorie Hope Young and James Young that explains more about this remarkable man who has devoted his life to the ways of nonviolence.
- WORLDVIEW continues the dialogue, discussion, and debate on the Hartford Appeal for Theological Affirmation. And we print critiques from Harvey Cox, John Bennett, Gregory Baum, and Gabriel Moran. Others will follow, and we will also publish responses to the critiques from some of the participants who formulated the Appeal.
