

University of Illinois-Urbana; Sheridan Johns, Duke University; Paul J. Kaiser, Ph.D. candidate, Indiana University; Daniel R. Kempton, Northern Illinois University; Vincent B. Khapoya, Oakland University; Michael MacDonald, Williams College; Joseph Mathapo, Missouri Valley College; Robert J. Mundt, University of North Carolina-Charlotte; The Rev. Columba Noron, Washington, DC; Thomas Romer, Princeton University; Ian Shapiro, Yale University; Eric Singer, Goucher College; Timothy D. Sisk, U.S. Institute of Peace; Calvin A. Woodward, Valdosta State College; and James J. Zaffiro, Central College.

Ohio State Hosts Faculty Workshop

The Political Science Department at Ohio State University organized a workshop on Data Analysis for College Faculty. The project was supported by a grant from the National Science Foundation. The APSA has been working with Ohio State University to distribute information about the program. Aage R. Clausen directed the workshop with presentations and research advice offered by

Ohio State faculty members including: Herbert B. Asher, Lawrence Baum, Paul Allen Beck, Gregory A. Caldeira, Pradeep Chhibber, Margaret Hermann, Anthony Mughan, Samuel C. Patterson, Brian M. Pollins, Elliott E. Slotnick, Donald A. Sylvan, and Herbert F. Weisberg. Karen Huxtable-Jester, graduate research associate at Ohio State University, served as the workshop coordinator.

The workshop sessions were devoted to facilitating faculty research and undergraduate teaching. There were hands-on lessons about micro-computers for teaching data analysis, survey research as an instructional tool; review and use of large data sets for teaching many fields of political science, including Comparative Politics, Mass Behavior, International Relations, Judicial Politics, Legislative Voting Behavior, Presidential Elections and Subpresidential Elections, and personal assistance on the participants' own research projects and teaching needs. Participants presented research projects and exchanged suggestions and plans for undergraduate courses in methodology and data analysis. A story about the workshops' curriculum and the participants' experiences, accompanied by a bibliography for use by other faculty who teach data analysis will appear in a 1993 issue of PS: Political Science & Politics.

Twenty-eight political science faculty attended the workshop. The participants, pictured in the accompanying photograph, included: Mike Avey, Northern Kentucky University; Harry Basehart, Salisbury State University; Roland Blasini, Sheridan College; David Bowers, University of Southern Mississippi; Thomas Brogan, Albright College; Rodney Christy, Saint Michael's College; Roy Dawes, University of Southwestern Louisiana; Pamela Edwards, Wittenberg University; Sally M. Edwards, University of Louisville; Catharine V. Ewing, Phillips University; Keith Fernsler, Dickinson State University; James S. Guseh, SUNY College at Fredonia; Richard Jacobs, St. Mary's College; Tom Kazee, Davidson College; Jeffrey W. Koch, SUNY-Geneseo; John F. Kramer, Sonoma State University; Tracy Lightcap, LaGrange College; Theresa Marchant-Shapiro, Union College; Andrew S. Merrifield, Sonoma State University; Robert C. Oberst, Nebraska Wesleyan University; Olusola Olabode, Tougaloo College; Leona Pallansch, Allegheny College; Daniel J. Palazzolo, University of Richmond; Jong O. Ra, Hollins College; Doug Reed, Ouachita Baptist University; James Roberts, Towson State University; Joe Uveges, Western Kentucky University; and Mohamed Yamba, University of Pennsylvania.

Political science participants at the workshop on Data Analysis for College Faculty at Ohio State University.

Suggestions for Nominating Committee Welcomed

APSA's Nominating Committee, chaired by Michael Preston, University of Southern California, seeks nominations for APSA offices.

The Committee will make nominations for eight Council persons, as well as the offices of treasurer, secretary, vice-president (three positions) and president-elect. The Committee will meet in February and report to the president no later than April 15.

Other members of the Nominating Committee are: Gary Orfield, Har-