ANTI-PERSONNEL LANDMINES — FRIEND OR FOE?

A study of the military use and effectiveness of anti-personnel mines

Geneva, 1996

The ICRC report was commissioned in the absence of other publicly available studies on the use and effectiveness of anti-personnel mines in actual conflicts. It is the result of collaboration between the ICRC, the principal author Brigadier (ret.) Patrick Blagden, a military historian and a group of senior military commanders from eight countries, who drafted and unanimously endorsed the conclusions. Participants included distinguished active and retired officers with extensive personal experience in mine warfare and in the conduct of military operations without these weapons. Their experience encompassed conventional wars, counter-insurgency and defence against mine use by insurgents.

The study examines classical military doctrine on the use of anti-personnel mines in light of their actual use and effectiveness in 26 armed conflicts since 1940. It considers the extent to which such mines have been employed in accordance with the doctrine which justified their use as well as the effectiveness of anti-personnel mines in international and internal conflicts and in controlling population movements. Emerging technologies which could change the future of mine warfare are discussed, as are a range of alternatives to anti-personnel mines.

The report is available in English, French and Spanish.

The International Review of the Red Cross is the official publication of the International Committee of the Red Cross. It was first published in 1869 under the title "Bulletin international des Sociétés de secours aux militaires blessés", and then "Bulletin international des Sociétés de la Croix-Rouge".

The International Review of the Red Cross is a forum for reflection and comment and serves as a reference work on the mission and guiding principles of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement. It is also a specialized journal in the field of international humanitarian law and other aspects of humanitarian endeavour.

As a chronicle of the international activities of the Movement and a record of events, the International Review of the Red Cross is a constant source of information and maintains a link between the components of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement.

The International Review of the Red Cross is published six times a year, in five languages:

French: REVUE INTERNATIONALE DE LA CROIX-ROUGE (since October 1869)
