The Journal of the College Theology Society

A journal exploring developments in Catholic theology, the total Christian tradition, human religious experience, and the concerns of creative teaching from the college and university environment.

From the historical Jesus through eternal law and multicultural religious education to sacramentality, authors of the articles in this issue range from Scripture through ethics and religious education to fundamental theology. We have Michael O'Keeffe on John Dominic Crossan and Marcus Borg, Jack Bonsor on homosexuality, Kathleen Talvacchia on religious education as multicultural, and Vincent Miller on Chauvet's fundamental theology of sacramentality.

In our Creative Teaching section, Ken Homan reflects critically on personalist and feminist teaching methodologies. And in the Editorial Essay, Nancy Dallavalle remembers the beautiful life of Catherine LaCugna, who died this year. Everyone in the theological community will miss Catherine and her work very deeply.

Our Review Symposium features Jesus and the Other Names. Author Paul Knitter responds to essays by Roger Haight, Rosemary Ruether, Francis Clooney, Catherine Keller, and Gregory Baum. The collection of book reviews should have something for everyone.
