ENVIRONMENTAL HISTORY

Environmental History is an international journal dedicated to exploring the history of human interaction with the natural world. It is copublished by the American Society for Environmental History and the Forest History Society as the successor publication to the two organizations' highly respected journals, Environmental History Review and Forest & Conservation History. Poised to become the journal of record in the field, Environmental History features up to four major articles, twenty-five book reviews, and bibliographic and archival news in each issue.
