Contributors

Gareth Austin teaches African and comparative economic history in the Department of Economic History at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He was trained in Cambridge and Birmingham universities, and he taught at the University of Ghana in the 1980s before moving to London. A former editor of the Journal of African History, his most important work is Labour, Land and Capital in Ghana: From Slavery to Free Labour in Asante, 1807–1956 (2005). He is currently writing a book on markets and states, in the context of information and incentive problems, in West African history.

Stephanie Decker has just completed an ESRC postdoctoral research fellowship at the London School of Economics in the Department of Economic History and will be the Harvard Newcomen Fellow at Harvard Business School for the academic year 2007–08. Currently she lectures on international business at the University of Liverpool Management School. Her Ph.D. thesis, “British Business, Development & Economic Nationalism in Ghana and Nigeria,” was completed in 2006. Previously she published an article on Barclays Bank’s Africanization program in Nigeria in the Journal of Imperial and Commonwealth History. Her research interests are the history of multinationals and the threat of economic nationalism in less developed countries in the 1960s and 1970s, and the intersection of business architecture and symbolic corporate communications in West Africa.

Lynn Hollen Lees is professor of history at the University of Pennsylvania and codirector of the Joseph Lauder Institute of Management and International Studies. She has held visiting appointments at Katholieke Universiteit Leuven and University College London. Recent publications include The Solidarities of Strangers: The English Poor Laws and the People, 1700–1948 (Cambridge, U.K., 1998), and Global Society: The World since 1900 (Boston, 2003), written with Pamela K. Crossley and John W. Servos. She recently completed, with Andrew Lees, Cities and the Making of Modern Europe, 1750–1914. Her current research centers on the development of a multicultural colonial society in British Malaya during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Robert L. Tignor is the Rosengarten Professor of Modern and Contemporary History at Princeton University, where he teaches courses on African history and world history. For many years, he was chair of the school's History Department, and he led an effort to expand the department's coverage of Asian, African, and Latin American history. He is author of several books, including, recently, Capitalism and Nationalism at the End of Empire: State and Business in Decolonizing Egypt, Nigeria, and Kenya (1998) and W. Arthur Lewis and the Birth of Development Economics (2005). In 2002 he published Worlds Together, Worlds Apart: A History of the Modern World.

Chibuiké Uche is professor of banking and financial institutions and dean of the faculty of business administration at the University of Nigeria, Enugu Campus. He received his Ph.D. in accounting and finance from the London School of Economics and Political Science in 1997. His dissertation was awarded the International Economic History Association's prize for best doctoral thesis completed between 1997 and 2000 on the post-1918 period. He has been a Commonwealth Scholar; a Carlo and Irene Brunner Scholar; a World Bank Robert S. McNamara Fellow; an Association of Commonwealth Universities Titular (Worshipful Company of Chartered Accountants) Fellow at the London School of Economics; a Leventis Visiting Fellow at the School of Oriental and African Studies at the University of London; and a Visiting Fellow at the African Studies Centre, Leiden.
