Manuscripts

The China Quarterly welcomes the submission of manuscripts from scholars, including postgraduate students, on all aspects of contemporary China and from all points of view, including those which deal with Taiwan and Overseas Chinese. Articles on China prior to 1949 are also welcome, particularly, but not exclusively, when these relate directly to contemporary China or to the history of the Chinese Communist Party. Articles should be submitted in quadruplicate to the editorial office. They should normally not exceed 8,000 words in length; should be typed in double spacing, with footnotes at the end; and should conform to the styling of The China Quarterly (see below). Submission of a manuscript is taken to imply that it has not previously been published in any form (including non-copyrighted working papers) and that it is not currently being considered elsewhere.

The China Quarterly is published by Oxford University Press on behalf of the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. The views expressed in articles are those of individual authors and do not necessarily represent the views of the School.

Romanization

Chinese characters should be provided on the first occurrence of each romanization, to assist in proofreading.

A new series on China

IN CHINESE

*A scholarly series
that enables today's scholars to understand anew
China's history, civilization, and traditionalism*

Society and Ideology is a new series of scholarly books in Chinese on the indigenous society and ideology of the People's Republic of China. The changes over the past decade in the Mainland have brought it to the cusp of a major transformation: China is breaking away from its long existence as an agricultural state, which it has been, essentially, since the Qin and Han era, to a new future of its own creation. This historical change is posing numerous important questions for local and international scholars:

- What impact will this radical transformation of rural China cast on the grassroots communities?
- What will be the structure of everyday life? What form will cultural expression and communication take?
- What will be the political structure and economic network?

These aspects will define the shape of 'Chinese modernity'; at the same time, the related changes provide an opportunity for the revival of 'Chinese traditionalism'.

China's revolutionary transformation has provided the historical possibilities and empirical foundation for ground-breaking studies on contemporary China; it is also enabling today's scholars to understand anew China's history, civilization, and traditionalism. This series also will include studies of Chinese history, with a view toward expanding the resources for understanding the historical and cultural subtexts of 'Chinese modernity'.

The series also gives equal emphasis to studies of society and ideology worldwide. If the revolutionary changes in China in the recent decade signify the emergence of 'Chinese modernity', then the striking developments in the West since the 1970s — in economics, the re-evaluation of Fordian (and then post-Fordian) mass production; the political debate on Democracy versus Republicanism; the post-modernist 'purge' of the very concept of Western 'modernity' — undoubtedly require major rethinking. The Chinese, who have been learning from the West since the end of the last century must re-evaluate their understanding of the West in the same way. Therefore, this series will include contemporary studies of the West, especially those that point to the disparities within Western traditions.

The Latest Intellectual Developments in China plus the Latest Insights into Ancient China

A quarterly journal of essays, reports and reviews each issue of proximately 190 pages

The major forum where the contemporary galaxy of Chinese thinkers publish their latest scholarship ranging from reflections on the recent development in the country's economy to a new understanding of Neolithic cultures, from surveys on the emergence of entrepreneurs as a new social force to research on medieval popular culture, from the exposition of conditions for foreign investment to thoughts on the current literary avant-gardism, from probes into the high sex ratio at birth since the 1980s to discussions on the Hong Kong problem, from anatomy of the modern neo-Confucianist movement to the textual criticism of ancient sages' teachings, etc.. The emphasis, however, is on important topics of the late 1990s and developments in the 21st century.

The only major English language journal on China's social sciences and humanities, Social Sciences in China serves the special needs of international readers who wish to better understand one quarter of mankind, a nation with a magnificent past, a nervous present and a promising future.
