The Hitler Youth and the SS

by Gerhard Rempel

Gerhard Rempel examines the relationship between the two most youthful and dynamic branches of the National Socialist movement—the Hitler Youth and the SS. He concludes that the coalition gave nazism much of its passionate energy and contributed greatly to its initial political and military success. By fostering in the Hitler Youth a "national community" of the young, the SS believed it could convert the popular movement of nazism into a proto-military program to produce ideologically pure and committed soldiers and leaders who would keep the movement young and vital.
