WHAT A WAY TO LIGHT A SHOW!

HOW THE LIGHTING SYSTEM AT THE NEW SANTA FE OPERA MEETS THE DEMAND- ING REQUIREMENTS OF A PROFESSIONAL REPERTORY THEATRE

For the truly creative director, the major limitation in lighting a show has always been the equipment. It wasn't that there weren't enough lighting instruments or control in the theatre . . . it was that they couldn't do enough fast enough.

But the Kliegl Bros. lighting system in the new Santa Fe Opera House has changed all that.

A total of 313 stage lighting circuits are connected at Kliegl's unique SAFPATCH cross-connect panel to the outputs of 100 SCR Dimmers.[®] The dimmers incorporate an automatic current sensing network, preventing equipment damage from accidental overloads.

The control system allows five scenes to be preset — and four sub-masters to control lighting changes within each of the five scenes. Two independent group masters, a split fader, "pile-on" capability, non-dim switching, and a complete set of manual dimmer controls further extend the designer's control capabilities.

Lighting instruments in the new theatre all use the long life tungsten halogen lamps. The designer has at his command 20 motorized four-color changer circuits, which can be preset for five programmed changes by the control operator.

Kliegl Bros. is preparing a booklet describing the Santa Fe Opera system more fully than is possible in this space. Please write or call Kliegl Bros. (Att: Dr. Joel Rubin, Vice-Pres.) for your free advance copy.

The Far-Out Theatre for WORKSHOP

The new theatre . . . what is it? Where is it going? The Far-Out Theatre Workshop will explore and explode traditional theatrical forms and attempt to reassemble them to reflect the contemporary scene. The eight-week Workshop will seek to discover the trends that may lead to the theatre of tomorrow. Since the entire group will be working together in this search, the students will be required to register for the full fourteen workshop units. Students at any level of experience in drama are encouraged to participate.

THE COMPLETE PELICAN SHAKESPEARE

Alfred Harbage—General Editor

Meticulously planned, edited by scholars and critics of great distinction, the thirty-eight volumes of the Pelican Shakespeare form one of the most highly praised and widely read editions of Shakespeare's work ever published. Now, to fill the need for a convenient and authoritative one-volume collection, the thirty-eight books in the series have been brought together in THE COMPLETE PELICAN SHAKESPEARE.

All the material included in the thirty-eight separate books appears in this new hardcover edition, with revisions by the original editors. In addition, there is a new 50,000-word General Introduction. A new Shakespeare canon and comparative analysis, five new Forewords, and full bibliographies are also included. A simplified system of notes has been used.

Beautifully illustrated, utilizing the finest type and paper, THE COMPLETE PELICAN SHAKESPEARE is a complete authoritative and attractive Shakespeare collection which puts to practical use the best of current scholarship.

New Black Playwrights

AN ANTHOLOGY

Edited by WILLIAM T. COUCH, JR.

THESE six plays deal with the realities of Negro existence as seen through the eyes of five young Black playwrights. From the experience of the ghetto and the Black struggle for selfhood they have hammered out new roles, new themes and new definitions for Black Americans, sometimes with satiric force, sometimes in a style of half surrealist farce, sometimes reflecting the ideology of the new Black left, and then again with traditional realism.

Revealing glimpses of Black America today are presented in these diverse dramas, each of which has its own style of beauty and honesty.

The plays include: Day of Absence and Happy Ending, by Douglas Turner Ward (winners of the Vernon Rice Drama Award and the Obie Award); A Rat's Mass, by Adrienne Kennedy (in the tradition of the theater of the absurd); Ceremonies in Dark Old Men, by Lonne Elder (a realistic interpretation of the groping heroism of the ordinary Negro); Goin' a Buffalo, by Ed Bullins (an example of the revolutionary theater, conceived with extraordinary imagination and ability); and Family Meeting, by William Wellington Mackey (a dramatization of the conflict between the middle-class Negro and his less fortunate brother).

Announcing ELEMENTS OF FILM

LEE BOBKER, New York University and Vision Associates

This exciting new textbook introduces students to the study of the film, the most dynamic of contemporary art forms. Unique in its approach, the book emphasizes the relationship between the technical elements of filmmaking and the creative and artistic uses of these elements.

Elements of Film reflects the author's vast experience in filmmaking. Winner of numerous awards from national and international film festivals, Lee Bobker has written, produced, and directed more than 300 motion pictures. In this book he examines in detail the roles of scriptwriters, film editors, cameramen, actors, and directors, and their relation to each other. In particular, he focuses attention on the modern director—the complete filmmaker—who shapes every element of the film and whose “style” (as in the case of a Bergman or an Antonioni) pervades the entire production.

Cameras, lenses, lighting equipment, sound recordings, and other tools and processes of filmmaking are fully described. The equipment and the techniques, and the ways in which they are used to achieve various artistic effects, are illustrated through some 60 supporting photographs—about half of which are taken from recent films. Four pages of full-color photographs, also drawn from recent films, are included to demonstrate the values and techniques of color photography.

An important feature of Elements of Film is the inclusion of actual film scripts. Although no script is presented in its entirety, complete sequences are reproduced—some running as long as 20 pages—to illustrate points under discussion.

In the two concluding chapters the author analyzes the work of major contemporary filmmakers and examines the function of film criticism, reproducing reviews by important film critics.

Paperbound. 416 pages, $4.95 (probable)

INADMISSIBLE
IN ANGER
EPITAPH FOR GEORGE DILLON
ENTERTAINER

“John Osborne’s Look Back in Anger, which shook up British stage traditions in 1956, had a triumphant revival Tuesday night at the Royal Court Theatre.

“Critics and audience cheered what was instantly recognizable as a production entirely above the level of anything seen recently in London. Fears that the play would seem a period piece were dissipated. . . .

“The revival discloses that Look Back in Anger was really less about social discontent than about the timeless element of human character — the need for love, the power of self-pity, the overlapping creativity and anger. It is pathos, not shock, that the play now conveys.”—Anthony Lewis, N.Y. Times

THE AMERICAN PLAYHOUSE IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY Brooks McNamara

In what sort of surroundings did our colonial forefathers see plays? More than 70 playhouses were built in America from the construction of the first crude playhouse at Williamsburg, Virginia, about 1716, to the completion of New York's splendid Park Theater in 1798. None of these still stand. In a fascinating architectural history, put together from playbills, ground plans, newspapers, manuscripts, diaries, prints and drawings, and fragments of stage equipment and walls, Brooks McNamara recreates the settings of early American amateur and professional dramatic performances. 53 intriguing illustrations include Latrobe's 1798 designs for a playhouse in Richmond, Virginia, just now to be built there. $9.95
