Planacrine in Laryngology

THE continuous application of an active bactericide to the mouth and throat is recognised as being of value in the prevention and treatment of infections of the oral and pharyngeal cavity. Unfortunately, gargles — the form in which these substances are more commonly prescribed — present difficulties to children and many adults, while they fail to reach the more deeply situated structures and their application under optimum conditions is intermittent. Again many disinfectants are rendered inactive by body fluids, giving rise to little more than a pleasant taste in the mouth and a false sense of security.

The active principle of PLANACRINE Lozenges, however, remains effective in the presence of saliva, possesses deep penetrating powers, and is harmless to the tissues. Its presentation in the form of pleasantly flavoured lozenges provides the practitioner with an antiseptic offering prolonged contact with the mucous surfaces in the treatment of follicular tonsillitis, pharyngitis, ulcerating and inflammatory infections of the mouth and throat, angina, etc. During epidemics of sore throat, influenza, etc., PLANACRINE Lozenges are ideal for the prevention of all infections which find entry by way of the buccopharyngeal cavity.

The Lozenges should be allowed to dissolve slowly in the mouth at the rate of 1 or 2 per hour, the maximum being 20 in 24 hours.

PRESCRIBE THE EASY EFFECTIVE METHOD

When spraying, the patient can hold his head in a natural position, yet the solution spreads throughout the nasal cavity, assuring thorough treatment. Effective dropper-application, on the other hand, requires a complicated posture technique which patients are apt to neglect in home treatment.

DeVilbiss ATOMIZERS

These illustrations, which are based on X-ray research, clearly demonstrate the advantages of the atomizer as compared with the dropper
