In 1953 the Law Faculty of the University of Leyden set up the Documentation Office for East-European Law for the purpose of the systematic study and documentation on the law of the countries behind the Iron Curtain, primarily the Soviet Union.

In general the law of the Soviet Union differs considerably from the legal systems of the Western countries.

However there are exceptions: some chapters of Soviet law bear resemblance to Western legal provisions. The student of the law of the USSR should pay attention both to differences and similarities, otherwise his knowledge of this interesting subject will be one-sided and inaccurate.
