CONTRIBUTORS

DONALD B. FREEMAN is an associate professor in the Department of Geography, York University, Toronto, Canada. His research interests include the geography of third world development, with an emphasis on urban and rural informal sector activities in East Africa.

STEPHEN ORVIS is Assistant Professor of Government at Hamilton College. He was a Guest Scholar at the Kellogg Institute for International Studies at the University of Notre Dame during Spring 1993, and served as an election observer for the Kenyan elections of December 1992 and May 1993. He is currently completing a book manuscript on the political economy of agrarian change in Kenya.

SEAN REDDING is an assistant professor of history at Amherst College. The article published here is part of a larger study on which she is working about the history of African taxation and its social effects in South Africa.

DAWOOD H. SULTAN is a doctoral candidate in sociology at Louisiana State University. His dissertation investigates the effects of mothers' education, financial independence and labor force participation on child health in Sudan. Between 1986 and 1988 he was a teaching and research fellow in the Faculty of Economics and Rural Development at the University of Gezira in Sudan.
