FEMINISM FOR THE AMERICAS

The Making of an International Human Rights Movement

Katherine M. Marino

"Marino's entirely new history of advocacy for equal rights treaties by feminists of the Americas builds on her stupendous research on two continents in three languages. This is the most convincing case I have ever seen for decentering the United States in transnational history in order to tell the full story."

RICE IN THE TIME OF SUGAR

The Political Economy of Food in Cuba

Louis A. Pérez Jr.

"In this cogent and accessible study of the political economy of food in Cuba, Pérez makes perfectly clear the challenges of a country's economic dependence on one crop, as well as the larger social, political, and international implications of that dependence."

—Robert Whitney, University of New Brunswick
272 pages $29.95 paper

THE INVENTION OF THE FAVELA

Licia do Prado Valladares

Translated by Robert N. Anderson

"Valladares challenges all of us scholars to question our assumptions regarding favelas, to stop relying on myths as shorthand for more complex historical explanations, and to acknowledge that favelas can no longer be understood as the precinct of the urban poor. I expect the book to be assigned widely"

—Bryan McCann, Georgetown University
272 pages $32.50 paper

HAYA DE LA TORRE AND THE PURSUIT OF POWER IN TWENTIETH-CENTURY PERU AND LATIN AMERICA

Iñigo García-Bryce

"Why haven't we had a serious biography of Haya de la Torre before? García-Bryce reveals the spectacular international presence wielded by Haya and his party, APRA, in the mid-twentieth century. Haya's exiles and writings take us from Peru to England to Mexico to Central America and beyond, leaving an enormous political legacy only now getting the attention it deserves."

—Charles F. Walker, University of California, Davis
278 pages $29.95 paper

THE MEXICAN PRESS AND CIVIL SOCIETY, 1940–1976

Stories from the Newsroom, Stories from the Street

Benjamin T. Smith

"A pathbreaking book that analyzes the role of the Mexican press—both national and provincial—during the formation and heyday of the PRIista state, convincingly arguing that newspapers were much more diverse and influential than commonly believed. This book fills a big gap and sheds a bright light on the politics of the PRI, especially some of its shadier corners."

—Alan Knight, University of Oxford
382 pages $37.95 paper

MAKING MACHU PICCHU

The Politics of Tourism in Twentieth-Century Peru

Mark Rice

"Brilliantly explores the importance of tourism and Machu Picchu to Peru's self-fashioning as a nation directly descended from the 'great civilization' of the Incas. A welcome and essential contribution to a broader effort to complete the puzzle of Peru's modern history."

—Paulo Drinot, University College London
